
United Sugars Sustainability Statement

At United Sugars, we recognize that responsible stewardship of the land, our operations, and our people is not only the right thing to do, it also makes good business sense.

We are committed to the long run.

How We Work

Collaboration is key to sustainability at United Sugars. We value our relationships with our employees, customers and community. We know that we are part of a wider ecosystem — only when we seek out connections and work together can we achieve lasting impact.

Our grower-owned cooperative is the largest industrial supplier of sugar in the US. By utilizing efficient and leading-edge farming practices, we produce more with less. Our milling operations incorporate state-of-the-art monitoring systems, resulting in reduced waste and down-time.

We partner with our customers to provide credible data to help them meet their sustainability goals and strive to understand their requirements for transparency in their supply-chains. In addition to producing our first sustainability report and supplemental information on our website, we regularly engage in direct conversations with customers on how to accelerate our sustainability impact.

How We Manage Sustainability

Sustainability responsibility is embedded throughout the company, from staff agronomists selecting climate-resilient seeds to the marketing managers who produce the sustainability report. To keep the team aligned, we developed a framework for organizing our sustainability programs, based on our most material issues.

As each individual member develops and implements sustainability efforts tailored to its geography, product mix, and stakeholder needs, United Sugars provides support for data aggregation and analysis and sustainability communications. The United Sugars Executive Committee approves and provides oversight of the company's sustainability strategy.
